

FLORAL SCYTHE

Before her murder at the hands of the cowardly prophet slayer Auwbdohl, the paupress Luchiis was destined to do great things. It was foretold that in her time she would bring the families of the Greater Red Sea to peace and end the territorial violence plaguing the sands. Auwbdohl, enraged with and jealous of those destined to greatness, sought to thwart Luchiis by sneaking upon her during her twilight prayers and opening her throat from the bottom of one ear to the next. As with each of his victims before Luchiis, Auwbdohl commemorated his victory by forging a weapon, a souvenir of his triumph.

For Luchiis he created the Floral Scythe. The snaith of this simple weapon was fashioned from coffin wood before being soaked in Luchiis's own blood and smeared with seeds from the flowers on her grave. When it was thoroughly soaked with blood and covered in seed the blade was attached. Before placing it in his hoard of trophies, Auwbdohl whispered the words of his mother over the scythe, bringing the seeds embedded in the wooden handle to life and imbuing it with magics under the domain of Birth.

The Floral Scythe is a magic weapon but damages as a mundane scythe might. It is covered in flowers of many types and colors that do not wilt or fall. Any creature slain with this scythe will begin to decompose instantly, and from it's corpse will instantly spring a beautiful garden of flowers. Those who fall dead from the Floral Scythe's blade cannot be brought to undeath, healed, or resurrected in any way.